PREFACE TO VOLUME I.

THE earliest Accounts in the possession of the Town Council of Edinburgh (with the exception of some fragmentary entries relating to 1540-3), are the Accounts of the Bailies and Town Treasurers from 1544 to 1567, and the Dean of Guild's Accounts from 1552 to 1567—some of the years, however, being awanting. These extant Accounts are collected in two separate volumes, the binding of which appears to be of the seventeenth century. They are not principal Accounts, but are evidently contemporaneous duplicates and drafts. It is not known by whom they were collected and bound, but lists or tables of contents are prefixed in the handwriting of Mr Alexander Chalmers, who was Town's Accountant from 1717 to 1760, and who also paged the volumes with reference to his lists.

Extracts from these two volumes were given by the Scottish Burgh Records Society as part of the series published by them of extracts from the Records of the Burgh of Edinburgh (2nd Volume of Extracts, 1528-57), edited by Sir James D. Marwick, Town Clerk of Glasgow. In his preface, the Editor states that the work of transcribing the extracts then published, and of collating the proof sheets with the originals, was done by Mr Robert Adam, City Accountant, "whose intimate acquaintance with the numerous and varied Accounts in the archives of the City pre-eminently fitted him for such a work."

The Town Council of Edinburgh, having taken into consideration the question of publishing extracts from their Records not included in the series above referred to, resolved to publish in full these two volumes of Accounts, and requested Mr Adam to undertake the work for them. From his position as City Chamberlain and Accountant, and his service in the Chamberlain's Department for upwards of fifty years, as well as by personal tastes and acquirements, Mr Adam was exceptionally well qualified for the work. He readily complied with the request, and the result is seen in the present volume, which contains the Bailies' and Town Treasurers' Accounts, and in the second or companion volume, which contains the Dean of Guild Accounts. Fac similes of portions of the original MS. are given, from which some idea can be formed of the laborious nature of the undertaking. The work of transcribing these Accounts was all done by Mr Adam, or by his daughter, Miss Adam, under his supervision, and he personally collated the transcribed MS. with the original, as well as with the proof sheets, and saw the work through the press.

In the two volumes as now presented, the arrangement of the original collection has been preserved.

The present volume, which forms Volume I., consists of two parts, viz. :—(1) The intromissions of the Bailies of Edinburgh with "extents" or taxations levied on the inhabitants for various national and local purposes in 1544, 1566 and intervening years, and including the fragmentary entries already referred to relating to intromissions of 1540, 1541 and 1543 ; and (2) the intromissions of the Town Treasurers with the Common Good or Proper Municipal Funds from Martinmas 1552 to Martinmas 1562; two Accounts by David Symer, Master of Works, for taking down the Old Tolbooth and building the New Tolbooth, 1561-64; and the Town Treasurers' Accounts from 1563 to 1566-7. The Treasurers' Accounts from Martinmas 1562 to Martinmas 1563 are awanting.

The second volume will contain the Accounts of the Deans of Guild from Michaelmas 1552 to Michaelmas 1558, and from May 1560 to Michaelmas 1567. The Accounts from October 1558 to May 1560 are awanting.

The lists or tables of contents prepared by Mr Alexander Chalmers, as already mentioned, are printed, with some additions and corrections by Mr Adam within brackets, stating the pages in the original volume, and, in the outer column, the corresponding pages of the printed volume.

A glossary explaining most, if not all, of the peculiar words used in the volumes will be found in the index to "Extracts from the Records of the Burgh of Edinburgh," published by the Scottish Burgh Records Society in 1892, and further information regarding the old words used may be found in Dr Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary. It has therefore been deemed unnecessary to give a glossary with this volume.

The period between the earliest and latest dates to which the present volume refers—1540 and 1567—is perhaps the most interesting and eventful in Scottish history. Every scrap of authentic information which can throw light upon it is of great historical value.

At the commencement of the period, James V. was on the throne of Scotland, and Henry VIII. was on that of England. In 1541 King Henry made certain demands, and King James promised to meet him at York and discuss them. King Henry travelled in due state to York, but the King of Scots did not appear. This threw the King of England into a fury, and he declared war against Scotland. King James mustered his army on the Boroughmoor and led them to meet the English, but when they reached Falamoor, news came of the dispersal of the main body of the English invaders. On hearing this a large number of the Scottish host refused to go further. Part of them, however, crossed into English territory, but, torn by internal dissensions, they were routed by English forces at Solway Moss, and their leaders taken prisoners. This was in 1542. King James retired to Falkland, where he was informed of the birth of his daughter on 7th December, and on 14th December he died broken-hearted. The Earl of Arran became Regent, and King Henry formed a scheme to marry the infant Queen to his son, afterwards Edward VI. The strange rough wooing was carried on by fire and sword. Edinburgh was burnt down by the Earl of Hertford and his English force in 1544, and again in 1545. King Henry died in March 1547, but the war was continued by his Government. Scotland was invaded by the Protector, the Duke of Somerset, in September 1547, and the Scottish defending force, with many Edinburgh men in it, was disastrously routed at the battle of Pinkie, near Musselburgh. The invaders destroyed Holyrood Abbey, and devastated the country round Edinburgh, but did not capture the city stronghold. For two or three years more the war raged with pitiless ferocity on both sides. Troops were sent from France, as the ally of Scotland, and Frenchman and Scot fought side by side. The infant Queen Mary—the innocent cause of the strife—was sent over to France, and at length in 1550 the conflict ceased for a time.

The Queen Dowager, Mary of Guise (whose portrait is in the City Chambers), who had been practically the ruling power in the country since 1544, took up the reins of Government when the Earl of Arran retired in 1550. It was not until 1554, however, that she was formally installed as Regent, an office which she continued to hold until her death in Edinburgh Castle on 10th June 1560. During these ten years, from 1550 to 1560, the land had rest from war. In 1558 the young Mary, Queen of Scots, was married to the Dauphin of France, afterwards Francis II., who died within a year and a half of the marriage. In August 1561, when she was nineteen years of age and a widow, Queen Mary arrived from France, and took up her abode in ancient Holyrood. Then followed, in rapid succession, her marriage with Darnley; the murder of Rizzio at Holyrood in 1566; the birth of her son; the murder of Darnley at Kirk-o'-Field; the marriage of Mary to the Earl of Bothwell; the escape of Bothwell, and the surrender of the Queen to the nobles; her abdication, and the coronation of Prince James, an infant of thirteen months old.

During the period embraced in these Accounts, events the most momentous were taking place, and influences the most powerful upon the country and character of the Scottish people were growing and strengthening. The name of John Knox figures prominently in the period, especially in connection with Edinburgh. The men who so prosaically penned the entries in the Accounts here presented, had witnessed the burnings and slaughter in the City in 1544, 1545 and 1547; they were familiar on the streets with the forms of Mary of Guise, Queen Mary, John Knox, and all the great ones whose names have come down to us from that stirring time. They doubtless discussed the strange new subjects which were agitating men's minds, and listened eagerly to the tidings of those events, the fame of which has reached us, and into the details of which every patriotic Scotsman is eager to inquire. It may be that, even in the prosaic entries now presented relating to City business, these Bailies and Treasurers and Deans of Guild give some glimpses into the circumstances in which they lived, and the methods and customs of their age. They were not professing to write history, but their writings form valuable material, which may be utilised in the building up of Scottish history—all the more valuable that it comes to us in dry details, which are free from all passion and partizan bias. This is the justification for the Town Council making these Records accessible to the public.

When the period begins, we find the City under regular Municipal Government of Provost, Bailies and Council, with a Town Clerk and other officials. Like their modern prototypes, they levied taxes—or, as they called them, "extents"—upon the citizens for local and imperial purposes. The Town was divided into four quarters—the North West, North East, South West and South East—and a Bailie was appointed for each of these quarters, who was responsible for the collection of its quota. The various incorporated crafts appear to have been assessed as Incorporations, and their individual members were included in the collective quota. The individual Burgesses who enjoyed the freedom of the Town, but who were not members of crafts, paid their shares on a scale graduated, either according to their holdings of property, or more probably their estimated means and substance.* The Bailies'

* Note.—Unfreemen had to give their "oaths upon their goods" that their proportions might be fixed. Vide Minute of Town Council of 26th January 1551-2.

Accounts here given refer to certain of the collections of extents during the period ; and, as they come first in the volume, it may be convenient to notice them before adverting to the Treasurers' Accounts.

In consequence of the troubles of the earlier part of the period, such peaceful business as the auditing of accounts had been rudely interrupted. On 14th March 1553, however, a grand audit of accounts was held by William Hamilton, Provost, William Craik, Ex-Provost, Bailies Lawson, Prestoun, Muirhead and Livingston, and Messrs Lindesay and Sym, Members of Council, and the audited accounts were then docqueted. The fragmentary accounts submitted to the Auditors (apparently all that could be collected out of the thirteen preceding years) are the battered remnants which had survived the civil broils and foreign invasions of the time. It is noticeable that the four auditing Bailies were themselves parties who had to produce accounts and satisfy the Auditors of their intromissions. William Craik, who had been Lord Provost, satisfied them that he had in previous years duly accounted for the sums which he, as a Bailie, collected in respect of the "Great Tax" levied in the Burghs in 1540-1 for the "doun getting of the twelve deniers." William Adamson's accounts for his collections in 1541 and 1543 were produced, with a certificate of previous Auditors, of date 1547.

This doun getting of the twelve deniers seems to have been a burning question. It appears that "a custom and new imposition of twelve deniers upon each franc* wared" (expended) in purchasing goods from foreign merchants in France had been levied by the French Government. This was felt by the Scottish merchants to be a grievous and intolerable burden or tax upon their drawings, and was regarded by them as a breach of the friendly arrangement under which the realms of Scotland and France had been so long in alliance and confederation, with mutual privileges and freedoms. On 21st August 1514 (within a year after the battle of Flodden), Edinburgh subscribed 3800 francs for the down getting "in all guidlie haist" "of the custom of France twelve deniers to the franc." It is interesting to note that at such a time, when the City was mourning a national disaster, it had spirit enough left to look to the maintenance of its foreign trade. In 1518, Francis, King of France, agreed to exempt Scottish merchants trading at Dieppe from the impost, but apparently this exemption was either not given effect to, or was found insufficient, for in 1519-20 a further advance of 4000 francs was made by Edinburgh for the purpose of getting exemption from the tax. For the time, their sacrifice for this purpose was in vain. In 1541 the Scottish Burghs requested King James V. to send an ambassador to the King of France to press for the down-getting of the deniers. King James sent Cardinal Beaton, and advanced £2000 to cover the latter's expenses. The whole Burghs of Scotland undertook to repay this money to the King. On 14th July 1541, the Provost, Bailies and Council of the Burgh of Edinburgh agreed to pay their share, and to collect the shares of the other Burghs (not an easy matter). Beyond the single entry regarding William Craik's part in this collection, already referred to, particulars of the collection have not been preserved. But the Cardinal's mission does not seem to have been successful.

* Note.—12 deniers = 1 sou.
20 sous = 1 franc or French pound.
The tax was thus five per cent.

In October 1551, another "extent" of £200 was laid on the Burgh of Edinburgh, and £400 upon the other Burghs of Scotland, for the "doun getting of the twelve deniers and other causes." The detailed accounts of the Bailies of the four quarters of the City for this extent will be found on pages 8, 9 and 10. Bailie Prestoun credits himself with twenty francs, which is stated to be equal to £10 Scots,* for the expenses of himself and his horse in riding to, and remaining with, the Abbot of Kilwinning, Ambassador in France, at the request of the Provost and Council, for twenty days, "for informing of his Lordship for doun getting of the twelve deniers." Deputations are thus not an invention of modern times, and the allowance for Bailie Prestoun and his horse (about 2s. 6d. per day) can scarcely be regarded as excessive.

In 1554, King Robert of France agreed to extend the exemption in favour of the Scottish merchants at Dieppe to the other parts of his Kingdom, but notwithstanding this—perhaps partly owing to the difficulty in proving that goods really had come from Scotland—the records show repeated appeals for redress till the end of the following century. The trade with France must have been considered of great and even vital importance to the Scottish Burghs, and to Edinburgh in particular, when such persistent efforts and sacrifices were made by all classes of the community to procure exemption from a tax which to us does not seem crushing in amount, and which only affected that trade. It would be interesting to investigate what the trade consisted of, and how the

* Note.—The pound Scots at that time was reckoned as equal to an English crown of five shillings—that is, the Scots money was equal to one-fourth of the English money. "Vide Narrative of Expedition of Earl of Hertford," 1547.

Scottish Burgh community depended upon it. The impost seems to have affected not only the merchants, upon whom it would fall in the first instance, but all the crafts and burgesses, otherwise the sums raised to obtain its removal could scarcely have been levied on them all.*

It is noteworthy that whenever the Provost, Magistrates and Council of the Burgh required money for national purposes, or for a purpose like this "down getting of the deniers," which was for the interest of the trading community, they held and exercised an inherent power to levy a tax upon the inhabitants. They seem to have possessed full powers of local government, including taxation.

The Accounts of James Wallace of the collection of £400 from the other Burghs will be found on pages 11 and 12. He seems to have succeeded in getting the quota of all the Burghs, excepting those of Rothesay and Lauder, "quhilk he could not get."

Then follow some disjointed, fragmentary entries from 1544 to 1548, and Bailie Sym's account for the unlawis (fines) of maltmen in 1548 (at page 13).

Bailie William Muirhead, when asked to account for his collections made in 1545 (one of them being in connection with the "comprehension of peace with Flanders"), explained that he had accounted in 1546, and had applied the balance of twenty-two shillings or thereby towards making a beacon on Arthur's Seat.

Bailie William Kerr also explains that he had accounted for

* Note.—On 30th June 1595, the Commissioners of Burghs "willingly granted and agreed to" certain imposts to be taken of goods pertaining to "Scottis men," and arriving at the port and harbour of Dieppe or any other ports of Normandy or Picardy from Scotland or elsewhere, "being Scottis men's guidis." The articles enumerated are salmon, hides, skins, wool, herring, keling, cloth, lint, hemp, cabilzarne, wax, pitch, tar and tallow. The trade with France must therefore have embraced at least these articles.

his collections in 1545; and Bailie Herbert Maxwell accounts for the escheat of George Donaldson, who was executed in 1546.

John Dougall, Treasurer, gives in his Account (page 16) of the Great Extent levied on the whole Burghs in 1544, so far as collected by him, but he explains that he could collect "na mair because the birnyng of this Burgh came hastelie tharefter." This no doubt refers to the burning of the City by the Earl of Hertford, in that or the following year.

The Accounts of William Craik, for his collection of money in 1544-45 for the furnishing of men-of-war and for comprehension of the peace with Flanders, are given on page 17.

The Accounts of the four Bailies for £1500 collected in 1554 are given. This sum, according to a practice which will be noticed immediately, had been advanced or raised by Ogeir Coquele, one of the French allies.

In 1554-55, a tax of £20,000 was granted by the three Estates for the building of forts on the Borders. Edinburgh's share was 2000 merks, and the City also raised £500 for the building of the New Haven. The Accounts of the Edinburgh collection are given in detail (pages 25 to 32). As the money was wanted immediately, and the process of collecting it, in due form of law, was a slow one, Monsieur Dosell, the French commander, who had the confidence of the Queen Dowager, "borrowed" the amount from "nychtbors of the town,"—that is, doubtless, from such as could be readily squeezed,—and these obliging neighbours were left to recover their money as best they could from the extent. This method was found convenient for securing the money for immediate use, while paying due respect to the law and allowing it to take its own time in following the formalities of recovery from the general inhabitants. It is evident from some of the entries in the Council Minute Books that the response of the "honest nichtbouris" who were called upon to advance the money in the first instance was not left altogether to their patriotism. Instructions were given to the Bailies to put them in ward until they paid the sums which the Council levied upon them. These convenient "borrowings" seem to have been recognised, under the name of "Emprunts," * as a regular part of the machinery for raising money.

A "host and army" having been ordered to convene on Falamoor on 2nd October 1557, an extent of £1200 was voted by the Town of Edinburgh for "furnishing and uplifting" three hundred men to pass forward with the same. The Accounts of the Bailies of the four quarters for this collection are given on pages 33 to 37.

In 1558, a second term's extent of a great tax was levied by orders of Lord Seton, Lord Provost.

In 1564 the Laird of Whittinghame was sent as Queen's Ambassador to the King of Denmark for certain business touching the affairs and weal of the Burghs, and the sum of 200 merks was voted by the whole Burghs for his expenses. The account of Mr John Prestoun showing the collection is given (pages 41 and 42). The merchants appointed to go with the Ambassador would not go

* Note.—Derived from the French Emprunter, to borrow (or old French, to lend). The Town Council, consisting of twenty-five members, as provided by the Decreet-Arbitral of King James VI., of date 22nd April 1583, had the "full government and administration of the whole commonweill of the Burgh in all things," excepting certain specified matters in which they required the concurrence of the fourteen deacons of crafts, among which excepted matters were included "Extents, contributions, emprunts and siclyke." It was further provided that as the merchants and craftsmen had to watch and ward together, so in all extents, emprunts, contributions and the like subsidies to be imposed upon the Burgh, both classes were to bear the burden and charge thereof "indifferentlie owerheid according to their habilitie and substance." Vide Decreet-Arbitral of 1583, "Extracts from Burgh Records, 1573-89," pp. 270 and 272.

for the small allowance offered to them in name of expenses, and so he was accompanied by the Conservator of Flanders and the Ross Herald, who either were not so exacting, or had other ways of maintaining themselves. Mr Prestoun himself seems to have had enough of economical service in his French deputation, already referred to, and preferred collecting the money at home to serving abroad on the terms offered.

In the same year an extent of £1000 was granted to the King and Queen for licence to remain from the Army ordained to convene in Edinburgh on 25th August.

In 1565, the sum of 1000 merks was "borrowed from the merchants, craftsmen, men of law, and scribes," and lent to the King and Queen upon the security of the superiority of Leith. An extent was levied upon the general citizens to repay this money to the accommodating neighbours who had advanced it in the first instance, and particulars of the assessment are given. This loan was never repaid by Queen Mary, nor apparently was any interest paid upon it. At a later date the City purchased the right of reversion or redemption of the security from the Queen's successors in the Superiority title, and the City's right to the lands then became absolute.

There was included in the extent of 1565 a sum of £1000 for licence to remain from the Army ordained to convene at Dumfries on 1st October to operate against the Earl of Moray.

Town Treasurers' Accounts.

The Treasurer was chosen annually at Michaelmas (29th September), and entered office at the following Martinmas (11th November). The Accounts accordingly run from Martinmas to Martinmas. It may be interesting to note what items formed the staple of the Accounts in 1552-3. On the one side the revenue consisted of the income from five common mills, the dues or rents from the "wild adventures," the petty customs on goods, and the rents of shops and other properties, and the common moor and the common mire (marshy land).

The total revenue in that year was .	(Scots)	£1798 15 7

"Wild adventures" (risk ventures) is a term applied to the trading of merchant vessels between the Port of Leith and foreign ports. The Burgh of Edinburgh had right of requiring all ships arriving at Leith with goods to be reported to them, and the goods entered in their books for the purpose of collecting dues thereon. Goods brought by such ships and not so entered were escheat or forfeited to the Burgh. Sometimes the Burgh farmed out the collection of the dues and escheat, and sometimes retained these in its own hands. In the latter case the forfeited goods were sold by auction at the Mercat Cross.

In the Accounts of 1553-4 there are entries of payments for a playfield at Greenside, for the building of walls and erections on the shore of Leith,—each week's pay-bill closing with the entry, "drink silver this week." In succeeding accounts there are occasional entries of special interest, such as expenses of a banquet to the King of Denmark's Ambassador, a banquet to the Ambassador of "Muscovia," and the rent of the latter's apartments in the "foregait."

In July 1558 there was a Triumph and Play in celebration of the marriage of Queen Mary and Lord Darnley. From the minute details given of the outlays in connection with this event, a description might be given of the public rejoicings on the occasion. They show us the Ensigns with their silk and yellow, white, blue, and red "taffeteis" cord; individuals dressed up to represent the seven planets and Cupid; trees placed at Nether Bow and Butt and Nether Trone; a convoy horse clad in "Flanderis gyrthis;" fireworks; the Tron decked with growing flowers; a wine puncheon set running at the Cross for the general good; dancers who had meat and drink furnished to them in John Littilis house at the on-putting of their clothes before the dance and after; cherries hung on the trees at the Tron, and unlimited supplies of ale and wine for the festive multitude. These and similar items, detailed on pages 269 to 274, with a play appropriate to the occasion, give a realistic picture of an old Edinburgh rejoicing.

In November 1558, there is entered a sum of £13 paid to David Symer "for up-putting of the image of Sanct Geill." This outlay was incurred in consequence of a popular outbreak on the 1st of September previous, being Saint Giles' day. On that day an imposing procession of ecclesiastics, headed by the Queen Regent, had been arranged for, in which the statue or image of Saint Giles was to be carried through the City. On sending to Saint Giles Church, it was found that the image had been stolen the night before, but in order that the procession might not be deprived altogether of the symbol, there was hastily borrowed from the Greyfriars a small statue which the populace called derisively "young Sanct Geill." Carrying this substitute, the procession, accompanied by bands of music, set out on their march through the streets. The mob seizing "young Sanct Geill" broke him in pieces and scattered the procession. This was one of the public outbreaks on the eve of the Reformation which indicated the impending change. Apparently, however, the time was not quite ripe for dispensing altogether with an image of the tutelar saint, and, as one had been stolen and the other destroyed, the vacant niche was filled at the cost above mentioned.

In the same year, a sum of 1s. 6d. is entered as paid for cords and besoms with which to scourge three lads who had been engaged in the singular amusement of "playing at funeral,"—two of them carrying the third through the town "as he had been dead." Henry Wynd's wife was burnt at the stake (her offence is not stated), and details are given of the payments for the cords, stake, coals for the fire, "pyk, rosait and nailles," tar barrels, and the labour of the men who made the pile, not omitting the ten pence to the lockman to drink.

Some Frenchmen charged with making or circulating false coin were sentenced to be executed, or, as the phrase was, "justified," and the expenses of the scaffold and gibbet are given. It is mentioned that they were brought condemned from the Abbey.

In 1559-60, the Treasurer, who had evidently come under ecclesiastical displeasure, enters the sum of five shillings, which he had to expend before he could get from the Bishop an "absolution from cursing."

On 8th May 1559-60, a payment of £40 is entered for the "honest sustenance and furnishing of the ministers of this Burgh."

From the entries in 1560, it appears that two shillings Scots—about six pence sterling—was the ordinary wage per day paid to masons.

On 19th March 1562, Master Adam Colquhone—whose title appears to indicate that he had a University degree—was burnt by command of the Provost, Bailies and Council; and details are given of the items paid for coals, cords, tar barrels, wine, powder, heather, pitch, resin, tar, gibbet, spars and deals, and the erection of the pile on the Castle Hill. The offence for which he suffered is not mentioned, and no other reference to him has been found in the books.

On 27th June 1562, a "tulzie" or street brawl took place between Lord Ogilvy and the Laird of Findlator, and an entry occurs for the expenses of a messenger sent on horseback to the Queen at Stirling to give explanations.

The Accounts of David Symer, or Somer, as Master of Work for taking down the Old Tolbooth and building the New Tolbooth and Council House in 1561-64, are given in detail on pages 370 to 453.

Then follow further accounts of Alexander Park, Treasurer, which give the payments in connection with the Mills, the Tolbooth, the Shore of Leith, walls and other works.

The fees paid to the Provost, Bailies, Councillors and officials in 1564-5 will be found on page 476.

The continual recurrence of entries regarding "towis" and "cordis" to bind accused persons, and besoms to scourge with, as well as branks and stocks used in punishment; the sword for beheading, and the gallows and other apparatus associated with executions, throws a lurid light upon the state of society during the period. The death penalty was inflicted for many kinds of offences and crimes besides murder; and, judging from the frequency of it in such a small community, it had little or no effect as a deterrent. The public sentiment must have been seared by familiarity with the revolting scenes of the scaffold, and the frequent practice of exhibiting the head and limbs of victims on the City gates.

The entries of payments made for the rent of the house occupied by John Knox are useful as giving names which, with the help of old titles and the Burgh Register, may assist in solving the question as to the exact spot where the Reformer lived. This is one of the ways in which it is hoped the materials supplied in this volume may be found useful.

The old index, and list of the various accounts contained in the volume, which will be found immediately following this Preface, furnish a convenient summary of the book.

It has to be added with great regret that Mr Adam died on 9th April 1899, before these volumes were issued. The Magistrates and Council desire to record here their appreciation of the faithfulness and diligence with which he executed the task undertaken by him in connection with the publication.
